Dylan Mondegreen

Dylan Mondegreen makes his Shelflife debut with his third and most personal album to date.

Dylan Mondegreen is a pseudonym for Norwegian recording artist Børge Sildnes. Børge has been releasing quality pop music since the mid-2000s and has acquired a very dedicated fan-base worldwide. His two previous albums have sold more than 5000 copies, but this will be his first album officially released in North America.

The entire album was produced and mixed by the legendary Ian Catt, best-known for his work with Saint Etienne, The Field Mice and other bands on the Sarah Records label. The result is undoubtedly Børge's most gorgeous recordings to date! Symphonic and lush, the album is filled with string ensembles, woodwinds and percussion, delightfully showing why he's been compared to the likes of Blueboy, Jens Lekman and Sufjan Stevens. The first single "It Takes Two" even features real steel drums as Børge is not afraid to use a wide range of instrumentation.

While the whole recording process itself was a lengthy one, the song "Life as a Father" gives a clue why this took even longer to complete. It's no doubt that there were some life changing events at work during this album's creation and it just made the songwriting even stronger. We're just lucky enough to get a musical glimpse into it all.

Dylan Mondegreen is out Tuesday, September 25th and available on 180 gram vinyl in a deluxe gatefold sleeve with download coupon, Compact Disc and digital formats.

Praise for Dylan Mondegreen:

"a Norwegian songwriter who hasn't released anything since 2009's The World Spins On. He writes sad, sweet songs - dare I make a Blueboy comparison? Perhaps! There are equal measures of Jens Lekman, Acid House Kings and Sufjan Stevens in there, too."

— NME, Jacob Graham (The Drums)

"Indie-pop has entered its soft-rock phase, and ... it sounds pretty good"

— Pitchfork
